TROX LIFE. ARTS AND CULTURE. ARTFUL AIR DESIGN. ISSUE NO. 12

Digitisation has led to a radical cultural transformation that is not just taking place in our private lives: it is also affecting industry above all else. Everyone is talking about Industry 4.0 and the Internet of Things.

Of course, the transformation in corporate culture has also affected TROX, and although this has primarily come in the years after Heinz Trox, we are still following his guidelines – innovation, integrity and intensity – as he intended. In 2011, he launched the system concept with the development and production of air handling units. We pursued his line of thinking by intelligently networking components in a way that would allow them to react to changes in environmental parameters independently.

Even in art and culture – the main subject of this issue of TROX Life – digitisation is making significant advancements.

Two cultural flagship projects form the main focal points of this issue: the Elbphilharmonie concert hall in Hamburg and Lascaux VI, a reproduction of the famous caves containing prehistoric paintings in the Dordogne region of France. TROX technology has found its way into both of these palaces of culture in recent years.

We also have several other articles to entertain you from the worlds of art and culture.
